

INDIGENOUS WOMEN IN THE SOCIAL AND SOLIDARITY ECONOMY: A CASE STUDY IN MEXICO

Author: Viridiana Regino Castillo
Advisors: Julia Smith Coyoli and Benito Ramírez Valverde

In Mexico, 23.2 million indigenous people live in vulnerable situations compared with non-indigenous people.

to overcome these conditions, they have opted for alternatives to the traditional economic model....

Like "San Isidro" water organization:
Manages and distributes water for agriculture.

60 members:
• 18 woman
• 42 men.

Metodology
• Interviews (4)
• Surveys (45)

RESULTS:

Gender equality

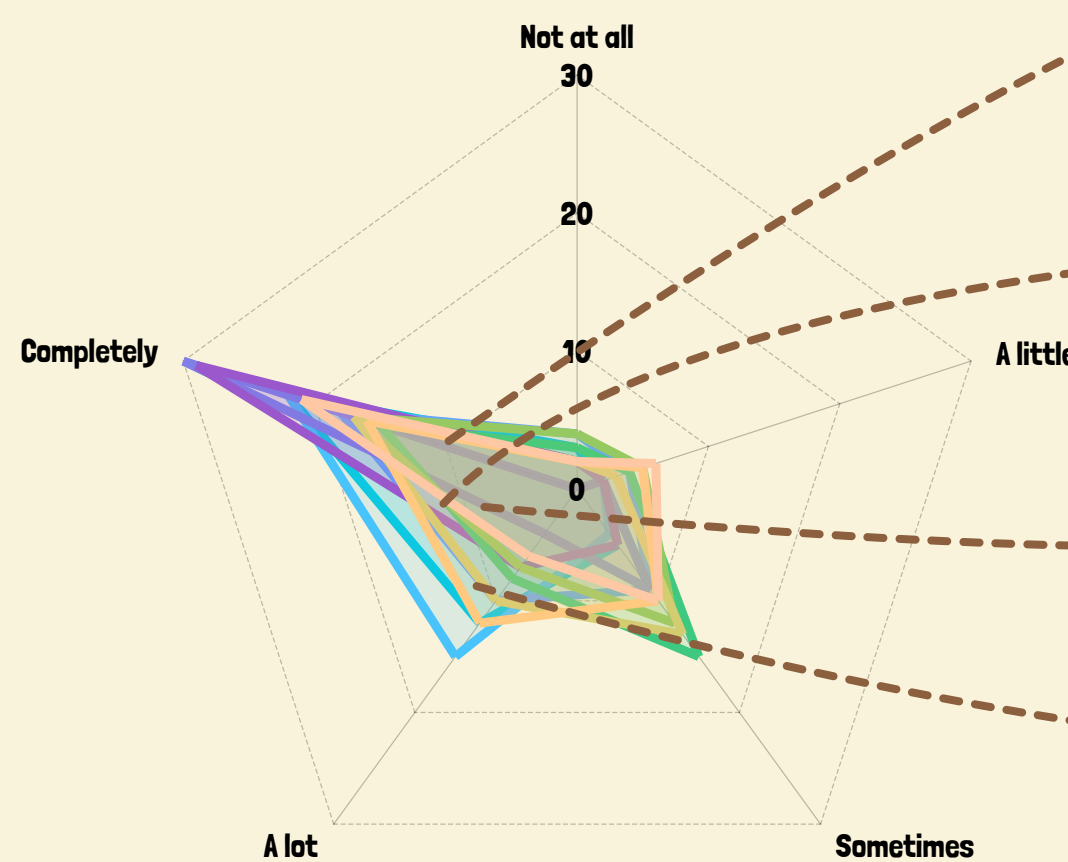

"Our most important value is to be present when needed," Ernestina

Solidarity

"We always vote on all decisions and if there is disrespect we apply fines," Rodolfo

Perception of solidarity and equity

78%

The organization has contributed to women's economic independence

90%

Work and responsibilities are distributed equitably

92%

Decisions are made by consensus

90%

Women participate actively and are listened to

WHAT ABOUT THE SOCIAL AND SOLIDARITY ECONOMY?

CONCLUSIONS:

1

The Latin American model is validated: Prioritizing community and non-hierarchical practices.

2

High perceived equity: Positive view of female equity despite low direct economic impact.

3

Positive internal climate: Participants feel valued and have equal opportunities and recognition.

4

Critical technology gap: Inefficient manual records; urgent technology and training needed.

Details in:

